

ABSTRACT

This dissertation which encompasses three sections focuses on the centrality of psychological contact between client and therapist, a single case study is used to discuss the clinical work and emphasise the importance of this process. In the literature review I outlined how attachment creates contact internally and externally.