

Abstract

Touch can heal. Touch can hurt. In this duality lies the source of my investigation. It stems from personal experience and from my observations of others, from having felt the love and from having known abject fear through touch. I needed to tame the topic and investigated touch in therapy to further my development as a therapist and as a human being.

(62 words)