

Abstract

This dissertation is an exploration into the mother wound and how to heal from a loss or lack of mothering. I explore how initial wounding occurs, the impacts and how to heal within a humanistic integrative therapeutic relationship. I explore this from the psychodynamic history surrounding the mother child relationship, developmental theories, humanistic perspectives, and neuroscience findings. I discuss how to heal within relational therapy and demonstrate this within my case study.