

Abstract

Written as a case study, this dissertation, reflects my approach to working with avoidant attachment as a humanistic and integrative therapist. It is presented in three sections: My rationale for practice, a literature review and a case study. It charts my relationship with my own attachment defences and highlights the impact those defences can have on the therapeutic relationship.